

Claire - Celebrating Leicester

I think in some senses, one of the things that I feel a little bit disappointed about is that I do not think the city makes enough of the things it has actually got. I think there is a lot more scope for celebrating really, although there are festivals after festivals, lots of things going on. Certainly when I was working in the field I was in, one of the things we tried to do was to bring different communities together to share their cultural heritage or to share just festivals or food. I mean food is always a great thing to bring people together. And I think there is perhaps not enough of that.