

Adekumle - Changes good and bad

Leicester is becoming more diverse in nature now because of the influx of people. I get surprised when I hear people speaking in my dialect on the streets. If you go to the African shops now, you see loads of queues. There are so many African shops springing up here and there, so it is becoming more interesting.

I am only worried, well it is my own opinion really, because I know I will never be lazy and I do not teach my children to be lazy, but a lot of people I see in the hospital at times baffle me and get me angry. They come and they take advantage of the generosity of the place. In Nigeria, if you go to the hospital, because you are paying, will you misbehave to the doctor? No. But here they come in and they take advantage of it and they start talking rudely to people, to nurses.
