

Joshua - Celebrating Leicester

Leicester has got underdog energy, like it has got a feel where it is a city which has been a bit put down upon. But there is a kind of pluckiness and a resilience to the people. There's something about it, and in terms of the tolerance of the city, I think that one of the real virtues of it is that it does feel very inclusive and accepting. Almost to a point where it feels like people who come here to try to do the opposite, they will meet resistance. I think there is something to be said about pride in the city for that, that it does stand up to bullies basically. I think there is a bit of fight in the city, which does make me feel there is a bit of pride in it.
