

Joan - Where is home?

I'm quite comfortable here [in Leicester]. I'll probably see out my days here, I can't see me moving anywhere. It's a friendly place. Most people I've met on the bus or in the library, they've always been friendly. I can't think of one place I've gone into and thought 'I don't like it here'. Even at the bus stop, sometimes you see a youngster and you get a bit uptight. They could be white, black, Asian, whatever. But when you get up as the bus comes along, the youngsters surprise me, because they've always been so polite. I always think they must have grandparents or parents who have told them how to behave. As long as I get that little bit of respect for my age, I'm happy. People should respect age. Everybody should respect everybody else, be friendly and smile.
