

Chanda - Stories of welcome and exclusion

When you're in London, no one has time to say hello to you. When you're in the shops, they just take the money and that's it. But in Leicester, it's like they have some free time. Even when you go shopping, people on tills speak to you and ask how your day has been, have you had a busy day, this and that. It's just welcoming and people look happier here.
