

Leah - Stories of welcome and exclusion

We moved here just before lockdown, so not the best time to start to mingle with your neighbours. But I have to say, it's quite a special area around here. We're close to the university in Clarendon Park, and I think this area has always had a reputation as being slightly bohemian, and I'd say that's a true reflection. It's a real mix of people, and they all seem to get on very well. We've had street parties. We have wonderful neighbours. Generally people are courteous and get along with one another. And we've been very happy. It's been a good move for us.