I think people are more aware of other faith celebrations and certain days, for example Ramadan or Diwali, and everyone's aware of Christmas. I think back in the day you wouldn't think twice about Diwali, whereas now there are celebrations I would describe as on par with Christmas. There are things like the Melton Road lights going up, celebrations, stalls, and even to some degree kids are being allowed out of school because Diwali is considered similar to Christmas, where kids get the day off anyway. It's becoming much more equal.
